LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Postni Revenue and Free Delivery. To the Editor of The Dispatch: In last Tuesday's issue of The Dispatch you criticised some remarks which had appeared in the Atlanta Constitution, in reference to the inequality existing between the mail facilities of the cities and those of the country districts. You argued the justice of this inequality from the fact that the cities pay more proportionately, of the revenue of the Postoffice Department than the country districts, giving as an instance the statement that "the excess of receipts ofer expenditures at the New York Postoffice in 1888 was $5,271,000, or about half the gross re-ceipts," Now, if we assume that the mail facilities of any place should be in proportion to the net revenue of its postoffice, the argument is onclusive, but the assumption seems to me an Leaving aside the fact that it is contrary to the principle of the equality upon which our postal regulations are otherwise based, it rould be allowable only if the receipts of each would be allowable only if the receipts of each postoffice were in payment for the work done at the office, and for nothing else. But this is not the case. The person who pays two cents postage on a letter mailed in New York, pays not only for its bandling there, but for its transportation to the piace to which it is to be sent, and for its delivery there to the person addressed. If it were customary to collect postage upon delivery instead of prepaying it, this two cents would appear in the receipts of the place of delivery, idstead or helping to make up New York's $5,000,000 surplus.

If the letter is sent to some other city it is promptly delivered by carrier, but if to some smaller town or country village it is allowed to lie in the postoffice there and await the chance in the postoffice there and await the chance being called for. Yet in the latter case impi delivery may be of quite as much im-tance to the sender as in the former, and he is just the same for it. On the other hand, paye just the same for it. On the other hand, a letter from a country village is delivered by carrier in New York, but the payment for this delivery is made by the sender at his postoffice. Tous the assertion made by the Constitution appears to be true: that the greater mail facilities of the cities are provided at the expense of the country.

Apother solids

the country.

Another point is this: of the receipts of the New York Postoffice a large part is derived from postage on newspapers and other periodicals. This postage, though collected immediately from the publishers, is really paid by the subscribers scattered throughout the country; and the country offices have the labor of handling and distributing these papers while the postage goes to the credit of New York. I hope the next great improvement in the working of our postal system will be the establishment of free delivery throughout the entire country.

PITTSBURG, April 18.

To the Editor of The Dispatch: Is marriage a failure? Poor, stale, defunct question! Bury it out of sight. None but an imbecile would ask such a question. It would be equally wise to ask: Are pen and ink a failure, because some reckless spendthrift commits forgery to replenish his prodigal purse? Is steel a failure, because some sneaking assassin sheathes his dagger in the bosom of his sleep ing victim? Is the atmosphere a failure, be cause of polluted slums of drankenness and poverty? Tell us, ye grumbling, groveling, discontented misauthropists of human nature, is the ocean a failure, because merchants are more sordid and greedy, than wise and humane, and send ships unworthy and overloaded to see and they condown in a story?

sea, and they go down in a storm?
Marriage a failure, indeed! It is rather the grandest and most glorious achievement of success that ever wreathed humanity's crown with victorious laurels, and the most priceless gem rescued from the wreck of Paradise. It may be a failure to the cowardly, selfish clown, whose ambition it is to enslave a woman who has more brains and courage than to submit to his tyranny. It may be a failure to the cold, frozen heart that has not sense enough to apfrozen heart that has not sense enough to ap-preciate the warmth of a wife's devotion and ove, and knows nothing of the intoxicating sweetness of a child's kiss or the music of its Marriage a failure. I wile to greet your coming with affection, children to welcome you with ringing hughter, beside the thousands of endearments that cluster 'round the fireside of home? Thrice have I solved the mystic problem and bathed in the limpid swectness of its costacy, hence I know whereof I speak. To you who declare marriage a failure, I suggest: Keep mute, and for the sake of your own credit don't tell the world what poor judgment you had, when, with the universe to choose from, and all shades of color from the ace of spades to Circassian loveliness, you were simple enough to make choice of a poor wife.

Legend of the Shamrock.

To the Editor of The Dispatch: Why is the shamrock used as the Irish em L BRADDOCK, April 18.

[The shamrock is a variety of the white trains leaving Ne clover, the trifolium repens of botanists, known May 6 inclusive. also as the trefoll. There is a legend co ing the connection of St. Patrick with this plant. When this good man was preaching the doctrines of the Christian church to the inoldest and the finest Pennsylvania pure rye and Kentucky sour and sweet mash whiskies: habitants of Ireland, they were sorely puzzled at the doctrine of the Trinity. "How," said one of their chiefs, "can there be three in one?" The Bishop, in reply, picked a leaf of trefoil and held it up before them. "Behold?" he said, "three and yet one." The illustration was so beautiful and forcible that the chief immediately accepted the Christian faith, and For a good fitting suit go to Pitcairn's Tailoring Emporium, 434 Wood st. TuSu was baptized, all his clan following his example, as was the fashion of those times. From this legend, it is thought, came the adoption of the shamrock leaf in later years as the national NOTICE—THE MEMBERS OF ALLENOTICE—THE MEMBERS OF ALLEGHENY Lodge No. 48, I. O. O. A. ACKERMAN, emblem. Or it may have been taken from the fact that the trefoll is such a common plant on the Green Isle. It has been thought that the prevalent growth of this plant in Ireland is the cause of the absence of snakes there. Pliny, in his Natural History, says that serpents are never seen on trefoil and that the leaves of the plant will cure the stings of venomous reptiles. Other naturalists have asserted that the trifolium and snakes are never found to gether, but we do not think that the matter has ever been scientifically tested.] A Call for More Light.

To the Editor of The Dispatch: Undoubtedly it is true to-day as ever, that some love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. Still is it really necessary that to help such a large portion of a city shall been placed in darkness, in the early hours of the moruing? Pittsburg, realizing that light was necessary at night, has just put on an enlightened appearance, but Allegheny has to go in an opposite direction. Of course the city fathers are never on the streets at such times, yet some are compelled to be out even at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, and they need light to guide their wandering steps either toward home or their work. Only a few mornings since a man going to his home, between 3 and 4, was seriously injured by falling over some bearing arross the addwalk than it was a parlor suit. Also at the same time and place, chamber suits in oak, walnut and mahogany, their deeds are evil. Still is it really necessary was necessary at night, has just put on an enlightered aspearance, but Allegheny has to go in an opposite direction. Of course the city fathers are never on the streets at such times, they all retire at the ringing of the old Curfew; yet some are compelled to be out even at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, and they need light to gaide their wandering steps either toward home or their work. Only a few mornings since a man going to his home, between 3 and 4, was seriously injured by falling over some boards across the sidewalk that it was impossible for him to see, and when the city shall be asked for several thousand dollars damages, they will think that gas for an hour later would have been much cheaper.

Do not those who order the gas to be extinguished so early know it is true in nature at

To the Editor of The Dispatch: Is it true that the teachers in the public schools in Pittsburg authorize and themselves use perforated drawings, or stencils, when desiring a show of scholars' proficiency in drawing, writing below "drawn by-," signing the scholar's name, when the pupil is not only not able to show such proficiency, but hasn't even taken drawing lessons? Can the teachers and directors of the art school of the city permit such fraud to past without exposure among those who shall be their future scholars? Can parents permit their children to be taught such parents permit such that the contract of the same such described the teachers? To offer the work of another as one's own composition, in all schools that pretend to teach honesty, is an offense for which the pupil is punished; but here we have the teacher procuring stencil patterns, designs from which are to be marked on the black-board on exhibition days, and exhibited as ROYAL ITALIAN and McMichaels
